But creative thinking, DeHaan and others say, isn't always the focus of teaching in science classrooms. "A lot of kids think that science is a body of knowledge, a collection of facts they need to memorize," says Bill Wallace, a science teacher at Georgetown Day School in Washington, D.C.

How creativity powers science | Science News for Students

Science is creative in much the same way that art, music, or literature are creative, in that scientists have to use their imagination to come up with explanations. These explanations are well informed "they are not mere guesses" but there is no escaping the fact that they are ultimately products of the imagination.

eral and creativity through science in particular, especially in early years education (www.creative-little-scientists.eu). However, there is empirical evidence that students do not appreciate the creative thinking required in doing science, and that they do not view science in general as a creative endeavour (see Schmidt, 2011).
