Leibniz's monadology [he goes on] is a metaphysical system that interprets the world as a harmonious unity encompassing a plurality of such self-determining simple entities. Loemker, of course, allows Leibniz a special place in the history of monadology. But part of the interest of his entry is the way in which he sketches its earlier history.

De Summa Rerum is a selection of twenty-five papers written by G. W. Leibniz early in his career between December 1675 and December 1676. Unlike many of his other works, which were written for other people, Leibniz wrote these essays to clarify in his own mind the thoughts on such major philosophical issues as the philosophy of physics, and the nature of God and of the human mind.
