Recurrent debt crises, including the global financial crisis of 2008, highlight the importance of measuring and monitoring external debt stocks and flows, and managing them sustainably. Here are few highlights from the analysis presented in IDS 2019:

International Debt Statistics 2019: External debt stocks

This report focuses on the ways in which stock data enter into the analysis of the flow of external resources between creditor and debtor countries. It describes key terms and the various debt classification systems; outlines methodologies for reconciling differences in debt stocks and debt flows; compares and contrasts the debt and debt-related data systems of the IMF, the OECD, and the World ...

Cross-Sectional Patterns of Mortgage Debt During the Housing Boom: Stocks and Flows Christopher L. Footey Lara Loewenstein Paul S. Willenx March 9, 2016 Abstract High rates of mortgage-debt growth among low-income households play a central role in many explanations of the early 2000s housing boom. We show that growth rates of debt for higher-income households were equally large.

While linking solvency and liquidity to the concept of stock and flow metrics sounds logical, it also seems important to understand what combinations of debt stocks and flow features can negatively affect debt sustainability. In this paper we take a first step toward answering this question.

Debt Stocks Meet Gross Financing Needs: A Flow Perspective

Ecological debt is usually conceptualized as the accumulated result of different kinds of uneven flows of natural resources and waste, but these flows are seldom referred to as ecologically unequal exchange.

Linking ecological debt and ecologically unequal exchange

In measuring debt, stocks and flows are both of interest: stocks are amounts, levels of debt (e.g., $100) and have units of currency (such as US Dollars), while flows are changes in levels " in calculus terms, the derivative " (e.g., $10/year), and have units of currency/time (such as US Dollars/Year).

Debt levels and flows - Wikipedia

Debt stock is a separate category from debt service payments, which are the payments that a nation makes on its debt. These categories are necessary because the terms of a loan to a government may change, such as a wealthy country allowing a poorer country to defer interest payments on its debt.
