Transitioning to a Dynamic Supply Chain Moving from the "integrated" to "dynamic" supply chain model enables companies to view their supply chains as adaptable ecosystems of processes, people, capital assets, technology and data.

2001). Both of these examples involve dynamically modifying the leadtimes in the supply chain, in response to demand fluctuations. This paper investigates optimal policies for such multi-echelon systems, where inventories and leadtimes are managed simultaneously. In addition to supply chains, this model may be applicable in a manufacturing setting as well.
